The Warfighting Functions and the Asymmetric Enemy

EVERY SOLDIER A SENSOR

KESHAV MAZUMDAR
Anti Terrorism Officer

HEADQUARTERS

EVOLUTION OF TACTICAL MILITARY INTELLIGENCE STRUCTURE

"No echelon has all the organic intelligence capabilities it needs to fully support The commander. Commanders and Military Intelligence leaders at higher Echelons should anticipate the intelligence needs of the lower echelons and "Push" tailored intelligence support down to them."

Tactical units engage in combat with intelligence inputs coming from the MI dept from higher echelons. In today's asymmetric war scenario the Company-level units should also have its own organic intelligence structures with very few personnel and assets deployed. They can act on available intelligence from the ground themselves without having to wait for collected, collated, analyzed information from Engade Int section or other agencies which takes time—add to it the dissemination delays. In addition to conducting mission specific analysis and kinetic or non kinetic attack.....READ ON

June 14th 2017 2:41AM Kolkata

Assume an area of operations AO or a battlespace where a Bde is deployed to conduct military operations. The various commands right from the topmost echelon down to the platoon commander are in their own way engaged in the battle , with the higher Commands more involved in decision cycle planning and execution whereas the lower and subordinate tactical units engaged in combat operations. The battles of today are characterized by nonlinear distributed warfare attributes in a highly fluid condition with more and more asymmetric type
